Law Practice: I am in my 13th year of law practice. My practice deals with a broad range of issues that lie in the interface between law and mental health. These issues include:

1. Administrative law: I represent health care professionals facing disciplinary actions by agencies including licensing boards, health care payment (e.g., Medicare), etc. (30% of my practice)

2. Criminal law: I represent individuals facing criminal charges where psychological variables are central to the defense (e.g., "recovered" memory, posttraumatic and dissociative disorders) (5 % of my practice).
3. Civil law: I represent plaintiffs in mental health malpractice cases, serve as "cumis" counsel for mental health professional defendants in civil cases, and consult to attorneys representing such individuals. (10% of my practice)
4. Family law: I represent mental health professionals who are involved in some aspect of family law, including special masters/parent coordinators, mediators, custody evaluators and psychotherapists. These are often professionals who are being pursued by one of the parties. (30% of my practice)
5. I consult with health care professionals who call for information/support with myriad problems they face in their work (15% of my practice).
6. Teaching: I provide continuing education workshops in risk management for mental health professionals via live presentations and online programs. (10% of my practice)

Forensic Psychology Practice: As a forensic psychologist, I most frequently consult (and testify) on matters involving standards of care for mental health professionals and matters involving individuals with complex posttraumatic and dissociative disorders.

Clinical Psychology Practice: As a clinical psychologist, I practice one day per week and my practice is limited to adults who claim histories of childhood abuse/neglect.
